Wedding Confetti

Traditionally, confetti is thrown when the happy couple leave the church. It is an old symbolic act to shower the couple with good luck, well wishes and love. And certainly, there remains no more romantic way to take your first steps together as a married couple than under a flurry of flower petals.

Confetti is the Italian word for sweets, in medieval Italy wedding guests would throw sugared almond sweets over the bride and groom, as they symbolized fertility and prosperity. Over the years this possibly painful tradition evolved into paper and flower petal alternatives!

The tradition of the flower girl going in front of the bride throwing petals to protect her from harm on her wedding day likely originated from the belief that the scent of the petals might drive away evil spirits.

Tater tots were invented in 1953 when American frozen food company Ore-Ida founders F. Nephi Grigg, Golden Grigg, and Ross Erin Butler Sr. were trying to figure out what to do with leftover slivers of cut-up potatoes. They chopped up the slivers, added flour and seasoning, then pushed the mash through holes and sliced off pieces of the extruded mixture. The product was first offered commercially in stores in 1956.

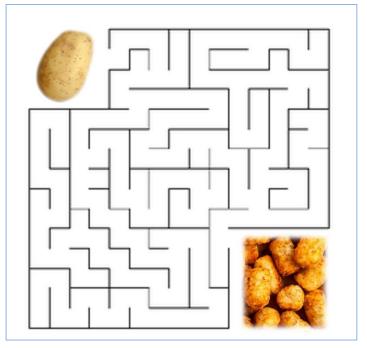

The name "Tater Tot" is a registered trademark of Ore-Ida—which has been a subsidiary of Heinz since 1965—but has become so widely associated with the dish that it is often used as a generic term. "Tater" is short for potato. The name "Tater Tot" was created in the 1950s, and soon trademarked by a member of the Ore-Ida company's research committee who used a thesaurus to come up with an alliterative name.
Today, Americans consume approximately 70,000,000 pounds (32,000,000 kg) of Tater Tots, or 3,710,000,000 Tots per Sonic drive-in also features tater tots on their regular menu; available toppings include cheese and chili.
